As always, we are grateful to the various bodies that have helped support our research on backbench behaviour – most obviously the University of Nottingham who fund the current research – and to the many MPs who have responded to our plentiful queries. Copies of this pamphlet and other material on backbench dissent are available free of charge from www.revolt.co.uk.

Introduction

Gordon Brown's first complete parliamentary session as Prime Minister, between 6 November 2007 and 26 November 2008 saw Labour MPs defy their whips on 103 occasions. Compare that with Tony Blair's first Parliament as Prime Minister, between 1997 and 2001, which saw Labour MPs vote against their whips on 96 occasions. In other words, a single session under Gordon Brown saw more rebellions than an entire Parliament under Tony Blair. This might well be considered an unfair comparison – cohesion was especially tight when Labour first entered government – but 103 separate rebellions was also greater than the number of rebellions in a single session by members of the governing party during any session for over 30 years. It was, for example, higher than any other session during the Blair era (higher even than the 95 revolts during the 2005-06 session); it was higher than the 93 revolts suffered by John Major during the 1992-93 session (when the Maastricht Bill was going through the Commons); and it was higher than the 97 revolts in 1977-78 (when Callaghan's PLP was tearing itself to pieces). One needs to go back to Edward Heath's problems over joining the EEC, since 1971-2 (when there were 128 separate rebellions), to find a parliamentary session with more backbench revolts by members of the governing party.

As a percentage of the divisions in the Commons, 341 in total, the 103 revolts constituted a Labour rebellion in 30% of divisions. This too is not a post-war record in itself, being bettered by 1971-72 and 1978-79 (36%) and 2004-05 (39%), but it still ranks a clear fourth during the 60-plus sessions since 1945. The rate of rebellion for the Parliament as a whole is greater than one rebellion in every four divisions, which means that it remains on course to see the highest rate of rebellion of the post-war era.

These rebellions covered a wide range of issues and bills, but the vast majority of Labour dissenting votes occurred over eight bills: the Counter-Terrorism Bill, the Criminal Justice and Immigration Bill, the Employment Bill, the Energy Bill, the European Union (Amendment) Bill, the Housing and Regeneration Bill, the Pensions Bill and the Planning Bill. Between them, the revolts over these bills accounted for more than three quarters of all the rebellious votes cast during the session.

The passage of the European Union (Amendment) Bill – ratifying the Lisbon Treaty – itself accounted for more than a quarter of the rebellious votes cast during the session. The Bill witnessed the largest backbench divisions on Europe seen in any of the three main UK political parties for over a decade, and there were more Labour rebellions on this single measure than there had been on the subject of Europe during the entire Blair decade. But this was at least partly because of the extended time the Bill had on the floor of the House (rather than in committee) and mostly those rebellions that did occur were very minor; there were just three occasions when more than twenty Labour MPs defied their whips, compared to the passage of the Maastricht Bill in 1992-3 when over half the rebellions during the Bill's passage through the Commons comprised more than twenty Government MPs. Despite some talk beforehand of how the Lisbon Bill could be 'Brown's Maastricht' (a phrase used in a Telegraph headline), the dominant characteristic on the Labour benches during its passage was not division, but unity.

As in previous sessions, the good news for the whips was that most of the rebellions to take place during the 2007-08 session were not large: the mean was almost exactly eight (lower than in the previous two sessions), and the median was just four. Almost three-quarters of the revolts seen during the session consisted of fewer than ten Labour MPs. The largest came on 4 November 2008, during a debate on the Employment Bill; 45 Labour MPs supported a clause that would have placed a duty on employers to co-operate with trade unions when conducting a ballot for industrial action. This revolt – the largest faced by Brown since he became Prime Minister – was somewhat overshadowed by events elsewhere the same day; Barack Obama’s election as President of the USA meaning it received relatively little press coverage. Even as a ‘large’ rebellion, though, it was relatively small: every session since 1997 had seen at least one rebellion of a larger size by Labour MPs against their whips.

A total of 104 Labour MPs voted against their whips during the session (down from 122 the previous session, and 114 the one before that). Seven did so for the first time ever since 1997: Robert Ffello, Ruth Kelly, Fiona Mactaggart, Rosemary McKenna, Andrew Miller, Dr Nick Palmer and John Spellar. A total of 107 have already voted against their whips during Gordon Brown’s Premiership. The most rebellious Labour MP was (yet again) Jeremy Corbyn.

Of the 30 most rebellious Labour MPs to vote against the whips during the Blair premiership, all have have now rebelled under Gordon Brown’s leadership, and only two of the top 50 most rebellious MPs under Blair – Dr Roger Berry and Betty Williams – have yet to defy the Brown leadership in the division lobbies. Moreover, the top ten rebels in the 2007-08 session accounted for 41% of the total rebellious votes cast; the top 20 rebels accounted for 58% of the total rebellious votes cast.

The Government won every whipped vote before the House. However, this was at least partly because it became adept at doing deals with its backbench critics, negotiating its way out of trouble. A pattern soon became established in which the threat of a rebellion would be followed by some concessions which, in turn, would be followed by the rebellion deflating, at least down to manageable numbers. This practice was at its most noticeable over the Finance Bill and the Counter-Terrorism Bill. The former saw the abolition of the 10 pence tax band lead to the very real prospect of the government going down to a Commons defeat, in what would have been the first defeat suffered by a government with a secure majority over the Finance Bill for at least 90 years.¹ As a result, the Chancellor announced concessions worth approximately £2.7bn, after which the rebellion effectively vanished. The tax revolt – led by Frank Field – could easily stake a case to be the most effective backbench revolt in the post-war period, without a single vote actually being cast against the whip.

The Counter-Terrorism Bill saw the government initially manage to get its proposals on 42 days pre-charge detention through the Commons, despite deep opposition on the Labour backbenches, and despite the Government having lost on a similar issue in 2005. The government won a key vote in June 2008 by a majority of just nine, a figure which exactly equalled the number of DUP MPs who had voted with the Government. Discussion of the deals required to gain DUP support diverted attention away from the extent to which the Government had also managed to placate its own MPs. Of the 48 backbenchers who the whips had identified as outright noes – in a list leaked to a Sunday paper in April 2008 – just 25 voted against the Government in June 2008. And of the 39 backbenchers who the whips had down in their list as wavering, just seven eventually voted against the Government. Some of this was due to pressure (and there were plenty of rumours of the extent to which votes had been traded for things like office space or knighthoods), but just as important were a series of policy concessions granted by the Home Secretary in the run up to the vote. The Bill then went to the Lords in October 2008, where the 42 days proposal was soundly defeated by 309-118, after which the Government announced a retreat. Faced with the prospect of the Bill shuttling back and forth from Lords to Commons, and the ever-present risk of not managing to win a Commons vote, the Government announced that they were dropping the proposal for 42 days' detention.

A similar, if less high profile, process of negotiation occurred over a range of other bills during the session, and backbench pressure (allied with Cabinet divisions) also saw Labour MPs granted free votes over parts of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill, despite the Government's initial decision to apply a whip. (In both cases, the Bills' Report stages were postponed in order to allow the Government time to have a rethink.) In another major reversal of policy, announced in November 2008, after several backbench rebellions over the subject, the Government abandoned plans to put the Post Office's card account scheme out to competitive tender in 2010, and instead awarded the new contract to the Post Office.

Matthew Norman, writing in the Independent (25 April 2008), described the Prime Minister as 'a legislative quadriplegic, paralysed from the neck down and reliant on uncaring backbench carers for the most basic of his parliamentary needs'. Frank Field put a more positive gloss on things during debate over the Planning Bill (another example where concessions defused a potentially damaging revolt): 'I was pleased to hear that one of the charges against the Government is that they have been busy buying off opposition on the Government benches. I suggest that that is the House of Commons working effectively, and the more effective we make the House of Commons, the better'.² We subscribe to the latter interpretation.

This volume is a record of all the occasions which separated members of the Parliamentary Labour Party from their leadership. It provides brief details of all 103 rebellions by Labour backbenchers between 6 November 2007 and 26 November 2008, along with full lists of every MP to participate in each of those rebellions. It is unlikely to be the most exciting volume you will ever read in your life. But it is not meant to be exciting. It is meant as a reference work, something to be checked occasionally for relevant information, and then put back on the shelf, or deleted from the PC.

We hope it might be useful for those voters who want to know what their MP did (or didn't do) during the last parliament, as well as for those – researchers, anoraks, academics, lobbyists, journalists – who want to know about the behaviour of the PLP during the period. We do not pretend that this is the story of the 2007-08 session – the full story is, thankfully, far more interesting than this – but it is at least some of the raw material of that story, and is here for others to use, in the future, however they want.

We list here every occasion during the 2007-08 session when a Labour MP voted against his or her whip. This is a deceptively simply statement – but there are a handful of important caveats which need to be understood if the data are to make sense.

The first is that we have excluded ‘free votes’, those occasions on which the Labour party managers, the whips, did not issue instructions to the PLP. This volume is therefore not a record of every occasion when a Labour MP deviated from the rest of his or her party; it is a record of every occasion when Labour MPs defied the whip to do so. This differentiates this data source from some of the (otherwise excellent) web-based search engines that are available (such as publicwhip.org.uk or theyworkforyou.com), which record all occasions when a party’s MPs are not 100% united.³ Our interest here is on matters of dissent, on those occasions where MPs defy their party leadership. For one thing, there is a qualitative difference between voting against your party when the whip is on, and doing so when it is not. In addition, not differentiating whipped from unwhipped votes can lead to strange conclusions about an MP’s behaviour.

It is sometimes difficult to distinguish definitively between whipped and genuinely free votes – hence the problem that the websites have - and there is a tricky middle ground, where the vote may not be officially whipped but where it is quite clear what the party hierarchy want their MPs to do. As one whip put it: there are ‘free votes and free votes’. But based both on contacts with MPs and with whips, we believe that we have identified all those occasions when Labour MPs defied the official instructions of their whips.

The second caveat is that we have excluded from our list of rebels those occasions when MPs vote twice. One of the most common reasons for this happening is that MPs have no way of registering abstentions. The procedures of the House of Commons give MPs just two formal options: to vote aye or no on whatever question is before them. MPs occasionally get around this by voting in both lobbies. This practice – which has been deprecated by the Speaker – is known by some Labour MPs as ‘Skinner abstentions’, after the veteran Labour MP, and frequent rebel, Dennis Skinner. It is a curious nomenclature. Skinner is by inclination not the abstaining type – and (as far as we are aware) has never voted in both lobbies to register an abstention. It would be much more sensible to call them ‘Taylor abstentions’ after the Labour MP for Leicestershire North West, David Taylor, who began to engage in the practice fairly regularly during the 2001 parliament as a way of casting what he called a ‘positive abstention’ (and, as will be clear in what follows, it is a practice he has continued to pursue).⁴

³ There is one other problem with the various web-based sources on MPs’ voting. When a party’s official line is to abstain, they fail to detect MPs who are breaking their whip to vote on an issue (either for or against). This is usually less of a problem for the government – since it is extremely rare for the government to be neutral on an issue – but it can be a much more serious problem when analysing the behaviour of MPs from opposition parties.

⁴ In the 2001-5 parliament Taylor cast a total of 21 deliberate abstentions; the first three sessions of the 2005 Parliament have already seen 26 such votes, five coming in the 2007-08 session. Paul Truswell has also begun to cast double-vote abstentions, coming a close second to Taylor, with four double votes in the 07-08 session. The practice has also spread to the Opposition parties, with both Bob Russell and Mike Hancock of the Liberal Democrats often voting in both lobbies when their frontbench line is to abstain, and UKIP MP, Bob Spink has cast 13

We do not include such MPs in our lists of rebels – or in our overall figures - but we have recorded their presence in notes each time it has occurred.

MPs also sometimes vote in both lobbies as a way of correcting an initial vote cast in error, rushing back through the other lobby once they realise their mistake. As the Labour MP Paul Flynn notes in his wonderful book, Commons Knowledge, ‘outsiders guffaw at the possibility of MPs voting the wrong way. After all the choice is simple, yes or no’. But with around 300 votes each year, MPs do not know all the details about each vote they cast, especially on the more arcane amendments; so, as Flynn puts it, they are ‘grateful for the sheepdog herding of the Whips who direct them safely into the lobby of righteousness and truth’.⁵ But sometimes the herding breaks down, and the MP gets directed into the wrong lobby. Voting can be a particular problem for Liberal Democrats and those from minor parties because they both often lack the sight of masses of their colleagues flooding into one lobby. It can, though, happen to MPs of all parties. Lastly, there are also those occasions when Hansard – the official record of parliamentary debates – simply mis-records an MP’s vote. Again, where, with the help of the MPs concerned, we have been able to identify such mis-recorded votes we have excluded them from the data.

Perhaps most importantly, of all, however, we are not able to record all the occasions when MPs defy their whips by abstaining, rather than voting against. Because the House of Commons does not allow MPs to register abstentions – other than, as discussed above, by voting twice – it is not possible to read anything into absences. The whips may have formally sanctioned an absence from a vote; it may be accidental; or it may be deliberate. There is no information on the record that allows us to establish, at least not systematically, the causes of absences. Where the information is available, we do provide a note of the numbers believed to be abstaining in any particular vote, but in many cases this should be considered to be a minimum figure.

We are very grateful to the MPs who helped us with the research, research of which this volume is just one part. MPs get bombarded with academic requests for assistance – from schoolchildren, students, and academics – and yet nearly all of them took the time to help clear up, or explain, what had taken place on a particular vote. We are also grateful for the assistance of the government whips’ office, for similar help in determining the whipping arrangements on some votes. Many MPs helped further, by granting interviews, the material from which we intend to use in further (more interesting) publications.

The research reported here was conducted as part of a research project, which is currently funded by the University of Nottingham, where the authors are based, and we are grateful for their support.

The pamphlet is in four main sections.

Section I (pp. 9 to 39) contains a listing of every rebellion by Labour MPs between 2007 and 2008, giving an explanation of each vote and listing the backbench rebels.

double votes (twice prior to losing the Tory whip on 12 March 2008, and 11 times since joining UKIP). And in June 2008, 11 Conservatives, including John Redwood and five frontbenchers, voted in both lobbies during voting on the Counter-Terrorism Bill (see below, p.30).

⁵ Paul Flynn, Commons Knowledge, Seren, 1997, p. 16.

Section II (pp. 40 to 43) contains summary tables of all 103 rebellions, giving issue, date, division number and size of rebellion.

Section III (pp. 44 to 54) contains tabulations of each of the issues to see significant rebellions during the Parliament.

Section IV (pp. 55 to 62) provides totals for the number of dissenting votes cast by each Labour MP, listing MPs by both the total number of dissenting votes cast, and alphabetically.

We have made every effort to ensure that the information contained in this volume is correct, but in the event that we have made mistakes, we would, of course, welcome the chance to correct them. We can be contacted at either info@revolts.co.uk or philip.cowley@nottingham.ac.uk.

I Backbench rebellions and rebels, 2007-2008

6 November 2007-26 November 2008

[1] 19 November 2007 (Div. 5):

Four Labour MPs voted against the Second Reading of the European Communities (Finance) Bill:

Colin Burgon
Ian Davidson
Roger Godsiff
Kelvin Hopkins

Note: Austin Mitchell who spoke in the debate, abstained.

[2] 21 November 2007 (Div. 8):

One Labour MP voted against a Government amendment to a Conservative Opposition Day motion on Health Care-Associated Infections:

Bob Marshall-Andrews

[3] 9 January 2008 (Div. 38):

Two Labour MPs voted against the programme motion for the Criminal Justice and Immigration Bill:

Dr Lynne Jones
Fiona Mactaggart

Note: Neil Gerrard, who spoke in the short debate, also abstained.

[4] 9 January 2008 (Div. 39):

Thirty-six Labour MPs voted against a Government New Clause during the Report stage of the Criminal Justice and Immigration Bill that removed the right to strike from prison officers:

Diane Abbott	John Cummings	Alan Meale
John Austin	David Drew	Anne Moffat
Colin Burgon	Bill Etherington	Denis Murphy
Ronnie Campbell	Paul Flynn	Gordon Prentice
Martin Caton	Neil Gerrard	Jim Sheridan
Michael Clapham	Dr Ian Gibson	Dennis Skinner
Katy Clark	David Hamilton	Geraldine Smith
Michael Connarty	Dai Havard	David Taylor
Jeremy Corbyn	Kate Hoey	Jon Trickett
Jim Cousins	Kelvin Hopkins	Dr Desmond Turner
Jon Cruddas	Dr Lynne Jones	Keith Vaz
Ann Cryer	John McDonnell	David Winnick

Notes: Paul Truswell cast a deliberate abstention by voting in both lobbies. Robert Wareing, who resigned the party whip after losing a reselection contest, also voted against the Government. The Liberal Democrat line was to support the Government, but one Lib Dem MP voted against the new clause.

[5] 9 January 2008 (Div. 41):

Two Labour MPs supported a Liberal Democrat amendment to Clause 107 of the Criminal Justice and Immigration Bill, during its Report stage, which made it a criminal offence to incite hatred on grounds of sexual orientation. The amendment would have required the Attorney General to have particular regard to the importance of the right to freedom of expression provided by the European Convention on Human Rights:

Jeremy Corbyn
John McDonnell

Notes: Former Labour MP Robert Wareing also voted in favour of the Liberal Democrat amendment. The Conservative frontbench line was to abstain, but six Conservatives voted for the amendment, while 14 Conservatives voted against, with Bob Spink casting a deliberate abstention by voting in both lobbies.

[6] 9 January 2008 (Div. 42):

Twelve Labour MPs supported a Labour backbench amendment during the Report stage of the Criminal Justice and Immigration Bill in the name of Jim Dobbin, on Clause 107, that would have stated that '[n]othing in this Part shall be read or given effect in a way which prohibits or restricts discussion of, criticism of or expressions of antipathy towards, conduct relating to a particular sexual orientation, or urging persons of a particular sexual orientation to refrain from or modify conduct related to that orientation':

Joe Benton
Ronnie Campbell
Jim Dobbin
David Drew

Paul Flynn
Roger Godsiff
Kate Hoey
Peter Kilfoyle

Greg Pope
Geoffrey Robinson
Geraldine Smith
David Taylor

Notes: The Liberal Democrat line was to oppose the amendment, but four LibDem MPs voted in favour of it. The Conservative frontbench granted a free vote, but only five Conservative MPs voted against the amendment, while 150 supported it.

[7] 15 January 2008 (Div. 45):

Two Labour backbenchers supported a Conservative frontbench new clause during the Committee stage of the European Communities (Finance) Bill that would have delayed its implementation until satisfactory completion of a review of the EU's funding:

Roger Godsiff
Alan Simpson

Note: At least two Labour backbenchers – Ian Davidson and Austin Mitchell (who both spoke in the debate) – abstained.

[8] 15 January 2008 (Div. 46):

Two Labour MPs voted against the Third Reading of the European Communities (Finance) Bill:

Ian Davidson
Roger Godsiff

Note: At least two Labour backbenchers – Austin Mitchell and Alan Simpson – abstained.

[9] 21 January 2008 (Div. 50):

Eighteen Labour MPs voted against the Second Reading of the European Union (Amendment) Bill:

Michael Clapham	Frank Field	John McDonnell
Jeremy Corbyn	Roger Godsiff	Austin Mitchell
John Cummings	Kate Hoey	Dennis Skinner
Ian Davidson	Kelvin Hopkins	Graham Stringer
David Drew	Lindsay Hoyle	David Taylor
Gwyneth Dunwoody	David Marshall	Mike Wood

Notes: Three Labour MPs – Ann Cryer, Gisela Stuart and Alan Simpson - who had signed a reasoned amendment in the name of Ian Davidson bemoaning the lack of a referendum on the Treaty (which was not voted upon), are thought to have abstained. Robert Wareing, the former Labour MP, also voted against the Government. The Conservative frontbench line was to oppose the Bill's Second Reading, but three voted with the Government in favour of the Bill; one other is also thought to have abstained.

[10] 28 January 2008 (Div. 56):

Seven Labour MPs voted against a Conservative frontbench amendment to the programme motion for the European Union (Amendment) Bill that would have allowed eighteen days' consideration of the Bill, rather than the twelve proposed by the Government:

Jeremy Corbyn	Roger Godsiff	Graham Stringer
Ian Davidson	Kate Hoey
Frank Field	Kelvin Hopkins

Notes: At least three Labour backbenchers abstained. Former Labour MP Clare Short also voted in favour of the amendment.

[11] 28 January 2008 (Div. 57):

Eight Labour MPs voted against the programme motion for the European Union (Amendment) Bill:

Jeremy Corbyn	Gwyneth Dunwoody	Kelvin Hopkins
Ian Davidson	Frank Field	Graham Stringer
David Drew	Kate Hoey

Note: At least two Labour backbenchers – Roger Godsiff and Austin Mitchell – abstained.

[12] 29 January 2008 (Div. 58):

Seven Labour MPs voted in favour of a Conservative frontbench amendment to a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill, disapproving of the Treaty of Lisbon's provisions relating to home affairs and justice policy:

Ian Davidson	Kelvin Hopkins	Gisela Stuart
David Drew	David Marshall
Gwyneth Dunwoody	Austin Mitchell

Note: Betty Williams voted in both lobbies in order to cancel out her first vote, which had been to vote for the amendment.

[13] 29 January 2008 (Div. 59):

Six Labour MPs opposed a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill that approved the Treaty of Lisbon's provisions in relation to home affairs and justice policy:

Ian Davidson	Kelvin Hopkins	Austin Mitchell
David Drew	David Marshall	Gisela Stuart

Note: The Liberal Democrat frontbench line was to support the Government in the aye lobby, but Mike Hancock cast a deliberate abstention by voting in both lobbies.

[14] 29 January 2008 (Div. 60):

Four Labour backbenchers supported a Conservative frontbench amendment during the Committee stage of the European Union (Amendment) Bill that would have excluded the article in the Treaty relating to jurisdiction of the European Court of Justice over police and judicial cooperation in criminal matters:

Ian Davidson
David Drew
David Marshall
Gisela Stuart

[15] 29 January 2008 (Div. 61):

Two Labour MPs supported a Conservative frontbench amendment during the Committee stage of the European Union (Amendment) Bill that would have excluded another article in the Treaty relating to judicial cooperation in criminal matters:

Ian Davidson
David Drew

[16] 30 January 2008 (Div. 62):

Two Labour backbenchers supported a Conservative frontbench amendment to a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill that disapproved of the Treaty of Lisbon's provisions relating to energy policy:

David Drew
Austin Mitchell

Note: The Conservative frontbench line was to support the amendment, but two Conservative MPs voted in the no lobby with the Government.

[17] 30 January 2008 (Div. 63):

Two Labour MPs opposed a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill that approved the Treaty of Lisbon's provisions relating to energy policy:

David Drew
Austin Mitchell

Note: The Conservative frontbench line was to oppose the motion, but two Conservative MPs voted with the Government in the aye lobby.

[18] 30 January 2008 (Div. 64):

Three Labour backbenchers supported a Conservative frontbench amendment during the Committee stage of the European Union (Amendment) Bill that would have excluded an article in the Treaty relating to energy policy:

Gwyneth Dunwoody
Frank Field
Kate Hoey

Note: One Conservative MP voted with the Government in the no lobby.

[19] 6 February 2008 (Div. 75):

Two Labour MPs opposed a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill that approved the Treaty of Lisbon's provisions relating to the European single market and competition policy:

David Drew
Kelvin Hopkins

Note: The Conservative frontbench line was to oppose the motion, but one Conservative MP voted with the Government in the aye lobby.

[20] 18 February 2008 (Div. 78):

Two Labour MPs supported a Conservative frontbench amendment during the Report stage of the Health and Social Care Bill that would have strengthened the independent role of Local Involvement Networks (LINKS):

Bill Etherington
Kelvin Hopkins

[21] 20 February 2008 (Div. 87):

Three Labour backbenchers supported a Conservative frontbench amendment to a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill, stating that the Treaty of Lisbon's provisions increased the European Union's powers over foreign, security and defence policy 'at member states' expense', and were 'not in the national interest':

Ian Davidson
David Marshall
Austin Mitchell

Note: Two Conservative MPs voted with the Government in the no lobby.

[22] 20 February 2008 (Div. 88):

Two Labour MPs opposed a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill that approved the Treaty of Lisbon's provisions concerning foreign, security and defence policy:

Ian Davidson
David Marshall

Note: The Conservative frontbench line was to oppose the motion, but two Tory MPs voted with the Government in the aye lobby.

[23] 20 February 2008 (Div. 89):

Four Labour MPs supported a Conservative frontbench amendment during the Committee stage of the European Union (Amendment) Bill that would have excluded an article in the Treaty relating to the role of the President of the European Council in the external representation of the European Union:

Ian Davidson
Frank Field
Kate Hoey
Kelvin Hopkins

Note: Two Conservative MPs voted with the Government in the no lobby.

[24] 21 February 2008 (Div. 90):

Three Labour MPs opposed the draft Prevention of Terrorism Act 2005 (Continuance in force of sections 1 to 9 – control orders) Order 2008:

Jeremy Corbyn
Kate Hoey
Dr Lynne Jones

Note: The Conservative frontbench line was to abstain, but two Conservative backbenchers voted against the order.

[25] 21 February 2008 (Div. 92):

Three Labour MPs supported a Lords amendment to the Banking (Special Provisions) Bill that would have brought Northern Rock within the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act:

Jeremy Corbyn
Mark Fisher
Kelvin Hopkins

[26] 26 February 2008 (Div. 97):

Six Labour MPs supported a Conservative frontbench amendment to a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill, disapproving of the reform of the European Union's institutions and decision-making structures, especially the new permanent President of the European Council, giving the EU a single legal personality, and 'abolishing national vetoes in more than fifty areas':

Jeremy Corbyn	David Drew	Kelvin Hopkins
Ian Davidson	Kate Hoey	Austin Mitchell

Note: One Conservative MP voted with the Government in the no lobby.

[27] 26 February 2008 (Div. 98):

Six Labour MPs opposed a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill that approved of the EU's new institutions and decision-making structures:

Jeremy Corbyn	David Drew	Kelvin Hopkins
Ian Davidson	Kate Hoey	Austin Mitchell

Note: The Conservative frontbench line was to oppose the Government motion, but two Conservative backbenchers voted with the Government in the aye lobby.

[28] 26 February 2008 (Div. 99):

Eleven Labour MPs supported an SNP amendment during the Committee stage of the European Union (Amendment) Bill that would have excluded a paragraph giving the EU sole competence over 'the conservation of marine biological resources', under the common fisheries policy:

Jeremy Corbyn
Ann Cryer
Ian Davidson
David Drew

Gwyneth Dunwoody
Frank Field
Kate Hoey
Kelvin Hopkins

Austin Mitchell
Alan Simpson
David Taylor

[29] 26 February 2008 (Div. 100):

Three Labour MPs supported a Conservative backbench amendment during the Committee stage of the European Union (Amendment) Bill in the name of William Cash that would have excluded an article in the Lisbon Treaty which Cash claimed gave the EU the power to extend its remit beyond existing treaties in pursuit of Union objectives:

Ian Davidson
David Drew
Alan Simpson

[30] 27 February 2008 (Div. 101):

In a deferred division, one Labour MP opposed the draft Cheshire (Structural Changes) Order 2008:

Gwyneth Dunwoody

[31] 27 February 2008 (Div. 102):

One Labour MP supported a Conservative frontbench amendment to a Government motion on the European Union (Amendment) Bill that disapproved of the Treaty of Lisbon's provisions related to tackling climate change:

Frank Field

Note: One Conservative MP with the Government in the no lobby.

Joe Benton	Robert Ffello	Greg Pope
Tom Clarke	Ruth Kelly	Andy Reed
John Cummings	Andrew Mackinlay	Alan Simpson
Jim Dobbin	Rosemary McKenna	David Taylor
David Drew	Denis Murphy
Frank Field	Albert Owen

Notes: Robert Ffello was PPS to Cabinet Minister Hazel Blears. He was not made to resign his position as a result of his voting. Former Labour MP, Robert Wareing also voted against Third Reading. The Conservatives, on a free vote, split 49/86 against the Bill, while the Liberal Democrats, also on a free vote, split 30/16 in favour.

[93] 28 October 2008 (Div. 295):

Eight Labour backbenchers supported a Conservative frontbench new clause to the Report Stage of the Climate Change Bill that would have required the new Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change to establish a greenhouse gas emissions performance standard for the maximum level of carbon dioxide that may be emitted by any new generating station:

Katy Clark	Dr Lynne Jones	Linda Riordan
Jeremy Corbyn	Bob Marshall-Andrews	Alan Simpson
Kelvin Hopkins	John McDonnell

Notes: Former Labour MPs, Clare Short and Robert Wareing also voted in favour of the new clause. Three Conservative backbenchers voted with the Government against the clause.

[94] 3 November 2008 (Div. 307):

One Labour MP supported a Liberal Democrat new clause during the Report stage of the Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill that would have established a register of dormant accounts:

Jeremy Corbyn

[95] 4 November 2008 (Div. 309):

In the largest rebellion of the session, and the largest since Gordon Brown became Prime Minister, 45 Labour MPs supported a Labour backbench new clause in the name of John McDonnell during the Report stage of the Employment Bill that would have placed a duty on employers to cooperate with trade unions when conducting a ballot for industrial action:

Richard Burden	Roger Godsiff	Dr Doug Naysmith
Ronnie Campbell	Dai Havard	Dr Nick Palmer
Michael Clapham	Kate Hoey	Gwyn Prosser
Katy Clark	Dr Brian Iddon	Linda Riordan
Frank Cook	Eric Illsley	Jim Sheridan
Jeremy Corbyn	Glenda Jackson	Alan Simpson
Jim Cousins	Brian Jenkins	Marsha Singh
Jon Cruddas	Dr Lynne Jones	Dennis Skinner
John Cummings	Andrew Mackinlay	Ian Stewart
Andrew Dismore	Gordon Marsden	David Taylor
David Drew	Bob Marshall-Andrews	Paul Truswell
Bill Etherington	Christine McCafferty	David Winnick
Mark Fisher	John McDonnell	Anthony Wright
Paul Flynn	Michael Meacher	(Great Yarmouth)
Neil Gerrard	Andrew Miller
Dr Ian Gibson	Austin Mitchell

Notes: The motion was defeated by 408 votes to 53, as the Conservative and Liberal Democrat frontbenches both supported the Government in the no lobby. However, two Liberal Democrat MPs defied their frontbench line in favour of the amendment, as did erstwhile Tory MP, Andrew Pelling and former Labour MP, Robert Wareing.

[96] 10 November 2008 (Div. 313):

Seven Labour MPs supported a Liberal Democrat Opposition Day motion that expressed concern at the Government's plans to put the Post Office's card account scheme out to competitive tender in 2010:

Katy Clark	Kelvin Hopkins	Paul Truswell
Jeremy Corbyn	Linda Riordan
Kate Hoey	Alan Simpson

Note: David Taylor cast a deliberate abstention by voting in both lobbies.

[97] 12 November 2008 (Div. 315):

In a deferred division, four Labour backbenchers opposed the draft Misuse of Drugs 1971 (Amendment) Order 2008:

Harry Cohen
Paul Flynn
Dr Lynne Jones
John McDonnell

Notes: The Conservatives granted their side a free vote, and nearly all of their number voted with the Government in the aye lobby, except Philip Hammond (a frontbencher) and Stephen Crabb, who both voted in the no lobby. The Liberal Democrats also granted a free vote; nearly all their MPs number opposed the motion, but two – Bob Russell and Mark Williams (both frontbenchers) voted with the Government in the aye lobby.

[98] 19 November 2008 (Div. 329):

Four Labour MPs supported a Conservative frontbench amendment during the Lords amendment stage of the Counter-Terrorism Bill that would have required the Secretary of State to establish national guidelines, setting out the procedures by which people could discover what information is held about them by public authorities, especially on the DNA database:

Diane Abbott
Jeremy Corbyn
Keith Vaz
Mike Wood

[99] 19 November 2008 (Div. 330):

Two Labour MPs supported a Lords amendment to the Counter-Terrorism Bill that would have issued guidance to all Government agencies on the operation, retention, use and destruction of DNA and fingerprint samples held by them:

Neil Gerrard
Keith Vaz

[100] 19 November 2008 (Div. 331):

Four Labour MPs supported a Lords amendment to the Counter-Terrorism Bill that would have enabled a High Court judge sitting as a coroner to require the disclosure of sensitive material:

Jeremy Corbyn
Mark Fisher
John McDonnell
Alan Simpson

[101] 19 November 2008 (Div. 332):

Five Labour backbenchers supported a Conservative frontbench amendment during the Lords amendment stage of the Counter-Terrorism Bill that would have given a Crown court judge the power to determine the scope of post-charge questioning of terrorist suspects:

Diane Abbott
Jeremy Corbyn
David Drew
John McDonnell
Alan Simpson

[102] 24 November 2008 (Div. 333):

Four Labour MPs opposed the fourth programme for the Planning Bill:

Jeremy Corbyn
David Drew
John McDonnell
Paul Truswell

Note: Former Labour MP Clare Short also voted against the Government.

[103] 24 November 2008 (Div. 334):

Four Labour MPs supported a Lords amendment to the Planning Bill that would have amended the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to ensure that planners had special regard to the preservation of gardens and other green spaces to prevent so-called 'garden grabbing':

Jeremy Corbyn
David Drew
John McDonnell
Paul Truswell
